Representative Assembly irrespective of any property qualification, provided that they have been residing in the taluk concerned for at least three years immediately before the date of the election. An additional clause to this effect will be inserted as clause (c) under Rule 3 in the rules issued with Notification No. G. 1803—G. R. 4-07-4, dated the 6th September 1907.

(b) Number of subjects for discussion.

The number of subjects for discussion in the Assembly, which has been steadily rising since 1907, reached the record figure of 832 last year. As such subjects are necessarily of varying degrees of importance, it is deemed desirable to limit the number of subjects without in any way fettering the right to discuss questions of real moment. Accordingly the maximum number of subjects, both General and Local, to be selected for discussion in the Representative Assembly in any year is fixed at 75 for each of the Districts of Bangalore and Mysore and 50 for each of the remaining districts. The selection of the specified number of subjects will be made on the basis of the number of votes secured for each subject at the preliminary meeting of the Representatives held by the Deputy Commissioners of Districts. The members should be informed by the Deputy Commissioners that, as a rule, questions of general importance should be preferred to purely local subjects which, as far as possible, should be attended to by the District Officers themselves. An additional rule to this effect will be inserted as Rule 5A in the rules issued in Government Order No. G. 4450-89—G. M. 235-06-1, dated the 18th January 1907.

(c) Rules for discussion.

With a view to further simplify the discussion in the Representative Assembly, Government are pleased to lay down the following instructions supplementing those issued in the Government Order dated the 6th September 1907 :—

(i) The subjects received from the Deputy Commissioners will be classified by Government into two classes, viz., Important and Ordinary.

(ii) Important subjects will be first taken up for discussion in the Assembly.

(iii) Ordinary subjects will then be discussed and dealt with rapidly, that is, they may not receive in the Assembly itself the same detailed consideration that Important subjects will.

(iv) After a reply is given by the President of the Assembly to any representaion, the subject shall not be discussed further.

(v) A time-limit of 15 minutes for each Important subject and 5 minutes for each of the other subjects will be ordinarily allowed. Discussion by the speakers on any subject should not be prolonged beyond the time limit specified, without the special permission of the President.
